allegations we will now respect, but starting from these allegations he argues as if the stigma he cast upon the one million sold since the war applied to the twenty-one millions sold before the war. These were not placed out against the will of the people; the people clamored for them. These were not sold below par; many of them were taken above par. No private person got the handling of this money, and it was applied homely to the building of our railroads, our turnpikes and our capital. Surely a speaker who desired to lay the whole case before his hearers would have said less before the one million and more about the twenty-one.

Again Judge Marks speaks at length about the right of the people to settle the matter for themselves whether they shall pay them in full or only a small amount on them, and then they shall begin to pay interest on them. It was unnecessary to tell the people all that they knew it well; it has been reiterated to them from a thousand pulpits for three years; they have heard it till the most stupid must have been convinced of it. No doubt they have the power to finally determine the whole question. But would it not have been becoming in a gentleman now this fidelity about preserving the repeal of our crushing burden upon foreign commerce has arisen from any failure of conviction among our politicians of the baleful influence of our present tax tariff. It has been a consideration of a ability which has shut their mouths. It has been known that the Democrats of Pennsylvania, New England and probably New York would not unite with us in demanding a repeal of the obnoxious duty and so the question has been in the background for fear of losing those votes. But now it appears that these same States are at variance with the Southern Western Democracy on the current question as on that of the tariff. I firmly believe now, so the evidence scarcely is lacking in the New York Republican or Democrat, was not content that some modification of the tariff is imperative demanded by the commercial interests of the country, and while we are convinced that the well-being of the nation requires a release of our prohibitory imposts much more imperatively than any change in currency, we believe that large influential interests can be enlisted in behalf of the reform.

The principal business before the Board was to provide for the increase in the number of pupils. For this purpose arrangements were made for an additional teacher in colored schools and for an addition to the school building in the Ward. The day for regular meeting of the Board, which has been the first Tuesday in the month, was altered, as that day is also used for the regular meetings of the Board of Mayor and Aldermen. The School Board will therefore meet on the first Tuesday hereafter close of each school year.

The Board of Mayor and Aldermen again had important business before them last Tuesday night. First they passed the water ordinance through its first reading; they assigned to Jno. McNeal contract for grading the lower portion of Franklin street, and placed the grade and slant on the sidewalks along the new building on Franklin street under the care of City Surveyor, to be approved for the purpose. Other matters of minor importance were entered into the Street Committee for action.

The following report from the Board of Health yesterday evening:

Dr. E. D. Brown, Health Officer, says:

"I am from a most faithful and able gentleman, and official, entitled to every consideration. He states that the sanitary condition of the city up to noon to-day. The fact that they have been absent the summer months to return their homes should convince reasonable persons that the demands of Justice, the fact that restrictions should be removed from the fullest of honest debtors, who, through extraordinary conditions of war, were hurried into difficulties from which there was no other extrication. These laws, in their real operation, have been the cause of a horde of rascally adulators throughout the country to use upon legitimate business individuals the same tactics which they have so extensively used upon an extent had this system. So enormous were the frauds committed, that confidence in the trade was entirely destroyed, and business became unhealthy. We do not doubt this state of things continued until the year 1878, and the close of the panic of 1873, and of the subsequent depression, which has since continued. The channels of commerce were closed, and commenced to flow in disordered channels. The laws which had bankrupt laws did not exist, and the restoration of the laws, and the restoration of order which it will effect, we currency question definitely settled. The question of the money will be by the next Congress may look with some assurance times and brighter prospects. The next session of Congress, and the chance of disturbance, the present condition of the country, and the fact that the country enter upon a long career of prosperity which it has not known many a day. So mote it be.
